

Imlac PDS-1 restored by DigiBarn and featured in the Maze War revival reported by cnet. The magnetic deflection display sat upon a desk containing the transistor logic CPU and magnetic core memory. The optional programmers console appears to the left in this image.
http://cnettv.cnet.com/tales-silicon-valley-original-fps/9742-1_53-32384.html

The keyboard, mouse and chord-keyboard employed by Engelbart and duplicated in the Purdue Mechanical Engineering Computer Graphics Lab in plexiglass. Normal operation was to press any number of keys. When all were finally released the corresponding command would be invoked.
<http://www.dougenelbart.org/firsts/mouse.html>

Close-up of the first production mouse. The high profile made room for two steel wheels set at 90 degrees to each other and each connected to a potentiometer that could be read by an analog to digital converter.
<http://www.computerhistory.org/revolution/input-output/14/350>